THE BICYCLE IN WAR.

How a French Corps Showed Its Utility in Army Manoeuvres. Although it was eight years ago that the French Ministry of War, recognizing the value of the bieyele for its mobility, authorized the formation of sev" eral battalions of military cyclists, it was not until this year that the corps was assigned fighting duties in the big maneouvres. It had previously been the custom to employ the cyclists singly as dispatch bearers or in squades as scouts, although they have been consistently trained to occupy a distinctive combative place in attacks. Considerable interest, therefore, attached to their trial this season, and throughout the long ride that took them from the eastern frontier to the scene of operations they were enthusiastically received by all the villagers and citizens along the route. The demonstration was a most convinueing one.

The companies were mobilized with their reserves on August 20. They belong to the Chasseurs, a branch of the French army which boasts of splendid traditions. On the following day they set out from Loagwy, on the border almost of France, Belgium and the Grand Duchy of Laxemburg, to reach Chaumont-sur-Loire, in the west, Notwithstanding torrential sains, they succeeded in accomplishing this feat without trouble, not one man being lost on the way, and footsore stragglers, the bane of all infantry or cavalry movements, being unknown. They were attended by a big motor truck from the commissariat department, and were thus enabled to push forward about forty miles a day without serious inconvenience. With only one day's rest during their ride about 330 miles and a free day at the end, they took part in the active operations of the "fighting" on Sept. 9, 10 and 11. On the last day of the manoeuvres they covered themselves with glory. The battalion was detailed with a brigade of eavalry and of artilery to atourse of the river, fell upon the guard ant bridge right on the enemy's flank, could have never succeeded because it its state. The Stricken Rose From Grief.

What a fortunate provision of nature it is, that deprives the ross of mental suffering; for how polgnant would be its grief to discover, in the height of its blooming glory, that a canker fed at its heart, and that its heauty and fragrance were doomed forever. Nature always spares the suffering; she is a veritable store-house of pleasing rewards, for those who seek her aid. In the years gone by falling hair and grayness have cast a sloom over the lives of thousands. cast a gloom over the lives of thousands of young women, but thanks to the investigations of scientists the true cause of hair destruction is now known to be a germ or parasite that burrows into the hair follicles. It is merger and use every where in Wisconsin; and what is the esult? Most of us think of the state and a university as great institutions, above, beyond and separate from us and our daily lives. In Wisconsin the university is as close to the intelligent farmer as his pig-pen or his tool-house the university laboratories are part of the alert manufacturer's plant; to the worker, the university is drawing nearer than the school around the corner and is as much his as his union is his or his favorite saloon. Creeping into the minds of the children with pure seed; into the debates of youth with pure facts; into the opinions of voters with impersonal, expert knowledge, the state university is coming to be a part of the citizen's own mind, just as the state is becoming a part t his will. And that's what his whole story means: The University of Wisconsin is a highly conscious lobe of the common community's mind of the state of the people of Wisconsin."
